Understanding the relationships between skills gives us insights into the needs of the labour market and the complexities of understanding skill demands. This report demonstrates how online job postings serve as a valuable source of labour market information that can be used to better understand the relationships between skills and to highlight trends in skill demands.

Connecting Skills: Using online job postings to unravel the demand for skills in the labour market

This report presents comprehensive insights into the relationships between skills in Canada's labour market. The content is tailored for researchers, policy analysts, and academics focused on labour and training.

KEY FINDINGS

In 2023, there were 4,552 unique skills extracted from almost 3.1 million job postings. Notably, the most unique skills appear in a limited number of postings, with only 710 skills appearing in 500 or more.

Social-emotional (or soft) skills account for nine of the 10 most frequently requested skills. Customer service (primarily associated with sales and service roles) is the only occupational skill among the top 10.

Teamwork, communications skills, and customer service are the most frequently requested skill types, appearing in 48%, 39% and 33% of postings, respectively.

Relationships between skills vary across occupations, indicating employers' different expectations for skills depending on occupation.

Certain skills predict the presence of others in postings. For example, strong writing skills correlate with demand for overall communication skills; being goal-oriented is often requested alongside teamwork skills; and operating a cash register is linked to demands for customer service skills.

Trump's trade war could cost hundreds of thousands of Canadians their jobs, push country into a recession, economists warn

The automotive industry will likely be among the first to feel the effects of a Canada-U.S. trade war because of how highly integrated it is on both sides of the border, said Pedro Antunes, chief economist at the Conference Board of Canada.
